Matt Weiner says

Why I decided to be Metro's guest editor

Honestly, I love this paper. I love the idea of a newspaper. If you're lucky enough to do something where you become part of people's lives, this is where you want to be. You want to be in their hands, on their way to work. When I lived here in New York, and I was working on "The Sopranos," I took the train to work every day. Metro was a big part of my life. Guest-editing sounded like a fun thing to do.

Matthew Weiner lords over a Metro design meeting, and then kicks back with an Old Fashioned. / MILES DIXON, METRO

How Matthew Weiner drove Metro to madness

New boss. The creator of "Mad Men" took over our paper for a day. Here's how it went.

Matthew Weiner grabs his phone and flips to a photo of him with Kim Kardashian. The creator and executive producer of "Mad Men" was at Time magazine's 100 Gala, where he saw Kanye perform — but more importantly, he got a picture with the Instagram queen herself.

"This is when you know your life has become stupid," he jokes.

It just became more stupid. Weiner now has something in common with Lady Gaga, Richard Branson, Will and Jaden Smith and Mark Ruffalo: He's been guest editor for a day at Metro. Weiner doesn't have the instant recognizability of his "Mad Men" stars Jon Hamm, Elisabeth Moss or John Slattery, but once you find out who he is — he's a rock star. He's helmed, and often written and even sometimes directed, 92 hours of a hit TV show about America's past that has changed its current culture.

In person, though, he's humble and, even more importantly, excitable and friendly. He's a talker, as anyone who's read or seen interviews with him knows, with an ability to answer even the most trivial question with a thoughtful (and long) answer. But he's also a listener, and he gabs with everybody even before drinks are served.

The subject of newspapers — that is, actual pieces of paper with words on them — is close to his heart, especially now that their prestige is in decline. "It's counterintuitive to suggest that something like this would disappear," he tells us. "I think people like the tactile sense of having a newspaper. Anyone who threw out their records knew they made a mistake when the turntables started coming back. I think human beings like to have something to carry around."

One of the pieces he assigned us was how gender issues have improved, if not as much as they could have. "Talking about gender was not a popular thing when we went on the air," Weiner tells us. But having characters like Peggy Olson and Joan Holloway has helped spark discussions about equal pay. "I love that the show's been part of this conversation. I feel like feminism retracted between when I was in college in the late '80s and when the show went on the air."

Another topic the show has helped bring front and center: cocktails. "I love the cocktail culture, but I'm irritated by how long it takes to get a drink," he jokes.

In between answering reader questions (check Metro.us for some of the answers to your most pressing questions), Weiner also downed an Old Fashioned.

"It's the most manly womanly drink there is," he adds.

Three cops cuffed on the same day

Charges. Three Philly cops arrested Thursday, charged with a variety of crimes from theft to animal abuse.

Police arrested three of their own Thursday.

Officer Christopher Hulmes, 42, a 19-year veteran assigned to the Narcotic Strike Force, was arrested on charges of perjury related to making false statements about the arrests of two men in May 2010 near H and Thayer streets.

CityPaper first reported in August 2014 that Hulmes admitted he lied in court in December 2011, but was not investigated.

Officer Christopher Jackson, 31, a nine-year-veteran assigned to the 25th District, was arrested on charges of theft for allegedly taking a Samsung Galaxy S smartphone from a witness who he was transporting on April 13, 2013. He later changed the phone to his own phone number, prosecutors said.

Officer Roderick Walton, 50, a 23-year veteran of the force assigned to the 9th District, was arrested on cruelty to animals charges for allegedly abusing his Cane Corso dog, named "Bear."

In December 2014, the PSPCA found Bear lived in unsanitary conditions and had been left with a broken leg for a week. Bear was euthanized.

Jackson and Hulmes have both been suspended by Commissioner Charles Ramsey for 30 days with intent to dismiss.

Walton resigned on Wednesday.

Caretaker of autistic woman found dead charged

Caretaker Hassanatu Wulu will be charged with neglecting a dependent-care person and recklessly endangering another person for the March 2014 death of 37-year-old Christina Sankey, 37, who died after wandering off from a Macy's, prosecutors said.

Sankey, who was autistic and could not speak, was found dead of exposure in West Philly 18 hours later on the street. METRO

Narco cops' trial: Where did the Rolex come from?

Narco cops. Whether or not a cop stole a watch off a dealer was debated at trial.

Brian Reynolds / PPD AND WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

The tale of how former Philadelphia police officer Brian Reynolds came to own a Rolex watch could play a role in whether a jury will believe the charges against Reynolds and five other city narcotics officers accused of ripping off drug dealers.

Reynolds is one of six Philly cops accused of stealing money and contraband from the very drug dealers they were meant to be policing.

Prosecutor's witness Victor Rosario said Reynolds swiped the watch during a drug raid at his home in 2008. He knows this because he once saw Reynolds in court, and that the officer mouthed the words "thank you" while pointing to the pricey timepiece on his wrist, according to prosecutors.

On whose watch?

Prosecutors questioned whether Reynolds would have had time to notice the watch.

But defense attorneys say Reynolds bought the watch from a family friend, and that they have receipts to prove it.

The dispute plays into the defense attorneys' argument that the federal government, in a rush to judgment against the allegedly corrupt drug squad, conducted a sloppy investigation.

Seeking to clarify the issue on Thursday, prosecutors put on the stand a jeweler who says Reynolds bought the watch from him.

Christopher Church is a Reynolds family friend. During testimony Thursday he said he bought the Rolex GMT at an auction for $4,000 on Oct. 6, 2007.

Later that day, Reynolds attended a birthday party for Church's son, saw the Rolex on Church's wrist and offered to buy it.

Church's memory of the transaction was shaky. Prosecutors hoped the gaps in his memory would translate into skepticism of his tale.

Church said Reynolds took the watch with him that day. He eventually bought the watch back from Reynolds, for $3,500, $500 less than Reynolds had bought it for.

1 US strike inadvertently killed US hostage

A U.S. drone strike in January targeting an al Qaeda compound in Pakistan near the Afghan border inadvertently killed an American and an Italian who had been held hostage for years by the group, U.S. officials said on Thursday.

President Barack Obama apologized and said he took "full responsibility" for all counterterrorism operations, including this one.

The deaths were a setback for a long-running U.S. drone strike program that has targeted Islamist militants in Pakistan, Afghanistan and elsewhere, often prompting criticism inside those countries as well as from civil liberties groups in the United States.

Killed in the January operation were aid workers Warren Weinstein, an American held by al Qaeda since 2011, and Giovanni Lo Porto, an Italian who went missing in Pakistan in 2012, as well as Ahmed Farouq, an American who was an al Qaeda leader, the White House said.

Another American al Qaeda member, Adam Gadahn, was also killed, likely in a separate operation, the White House added.

"I profoundly regret what happened. On behalf of the United States government, I offer our deepest apologies to the families," Obama told reporters at the White House. REUTERS

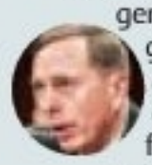
2 Ex-general, CIA chief Petraeus gets probation, $100,000 fine in leak case

Former U.S. military commander and CIA Director David Petraeus was sentenced to two years of probation and ordered to pay a $100,000 fine on Thursday after pleading guilty to mishandling classified information.



The retired four-star general apologized as he admitted to giving the information to his mistress, who was writing his biography. He agreed, under a plea deal, to a misdemeanor charge of unauthorized removal and retention of classified material in federal court in Charlotte, North Carolina. REUTERS

3 US Secret Service takes over year to fix ex-president's home alarm

The U.S. Secret Service failed to replace a broken alarm system at the Houston home of former President George H.W. Bush for more than a year, according to a government report on the troubled protection agency.

The report, sent to Secret Service Director Joseph Clancy and released on Thursday, was compiled by the Department of Homeland Security's inspector general, John Roth, who said the agency will improve its process for tracking maintenance problems with security equipment and keeping it up to date. 4 SkyWest unclear on why plane passengers lost consciousness

A day after three passengers lost consciousness on a commercial plane traveling from Chicago to Hartford, Connecticut, airline officials remained unclear on what had caused the travelers to pass out.

The pilot of the flight began a rapid descent after learning that a passenger had passed out from possible cabin pressure issues.

After making an emergency landing in Buffalo, New York, medics on the ground determined that two additional passengers sitting nearby had also lost consciousness. REUTERS

People watch from Puerto Varas, southern Chile, a high column of ash and lava spewing from the Calbuco volcano. / GETTY IMAGES

Huge ash cloud pours from Chile volcano

Volcano. Calbuco erupted twice over the last 24 hours and has now paused, but it remains unstable.

An ash cloud from the Calbuco volcano in southern Chile that erupted unexpectedly on Wednesday was blowing into Chile and Argentina on Thursday, forcing the cancellation of flights from nearby cities in both countries and blanketing residents in ash.

The volcano, which last had a major eruption in 1961, has belched a spectacular plume of ash and smoke around 9 miles into the sky near the popular tourist town of Puerto Varas, some 625 miles south of Santiago.

Winds have already carried part of the ash cloud to the city of Chillan, some 400 kilometers south of Santiago, and could reach the capital by the end of the day, said government meteorologist Arnoldo Zuniga.

"At the moment we don't forecast the ashes will reach Buenos Aires city, depending on whether or not there is a third eruption," said Ignacio Lopez, a meteorologist at Argentina's national meteorology center.

Volcanic ash can damage aircraft and makes flying dangerous. In 2011, the eruption of Chile's Puyehue volcano sent ash high into the atmosphere, leading to flight cancellations as far away as Australia.

"So far, the eruption has been slightly less serious (than in 2011) and the meteorological conditions have been good, meaning the ashes are remaining suspended in the air," said Lopez.

Flights

LAN Chile had canceled over 20 domestic flights since the eruption but said on Thursday afternoon that owing to an improvement in conditions as the ash dissipated, it was resuming a normal schedule.

International airlines that fly into Santiago contacted by Reuters said they were monitoring the situation but flights were unaffected.

In Argentina, Bariloche and Neuquen airports were shut, with Bariloche — which TV pictures showed covered in gray ash — due to be closed Friday too. Flights by LATAM Airlines' local arm LAN Argentina and state-owned Aerolineas Argentinas were affected.

Nearly 4,500 people have been evacuated from the immediate area, authorities said. REUTERS

Women at work, you've come a long way ... maybe

Pay equality. More than 50 years since JFK signed the Equal Pay Act, women have yet to reach parity.

It has been more than five decades since President Kennedy signed the Equal Pay Act of 1963, years we've relived — or lived vicariously for the first time — watching the tumultuous rise of junior copywriter Peggy Olson on the AMC television series "Mad Men."

Olson, played by Elisabeth Moss, fights her way to workplace relevance and, later, prominence in the testosterone-addled world of Madison Avenue, a sometimes unwitting but relentless feminist.

Yet it's important to remember that the real data on women's pay has lagged. Women were paid 58.9 cents on the dollar compared to men in 1963, and today the figure is 78.3 cents, according to the Institute for Women's Policy Research (IWPR) in Washington, D.C. Hard-won progress but a shocking result after a half-century of effort.

Pay equality, sometimes called "pay equity" by academics, is a big deal. If cents on the dollar don't seem important, consider a clear number that should give anyone pause: $800,000.

That's the amount of money a college-educated woman doesn't earn by age 59 compared with a similarly skilled man, according to the IWPR. It's easily enough cash to make the difference between retiring comfortably or retiring into poverty.

And this assumes the typical woman is a latter-day Peggy Olson, one who succeeds in getting an education, a secure job and eventual advancement. For women of color, immigrants and the less educated, the numbers only get worse.

It will take decades more to close the pay gap, until 2058, the IWPR reports — if pay equity doesn't simply become a permanent future ideal that's never achieved despite legislation and good intentions.

It's easy to say "men and women do different work," and that's often true. In addition, many women voluntarily stop working for a period — to rear children, for instance — then can fall into lower-paying jobs or find their skills have atrophied, stagnating advancement.

Researchers carefully control for these differences and a stubborn disparity remains. "Once you look across groups of workers with similarities, that gap still exists," says Jessica Milli, Ph.D., a senior research associate at the IWPR. "Even if we were able to explain away the entirety of the wage gap, the fact that there are differences is an important thing and a thing that needs to be addressed."

Matthew says ...

"This is going to make a lot of people angry and that makes me happy. It's very short-sighted to not pay people the same amount. I love that the show has been part of this conversation. But the questions have not changed at all. Everyone who is a woman still has to ask, 'Can I have it all?'"

Quoted

"Even if we were able to explain away the entirety of the wage gap, the fact that there are differences is an important thing and a thing that needs to be addressed."

Peggy Olson's "Peggy Bank" couldn't have been that full thanks to insufficient wages for women in her time. / AMC

One avenue toward change is legislation that aims to lighten the penalty women pay for choosing to care for children, such as paid family leave. Women in states with paid leave are more likely to return to the workforce and to return to their previous employer, Milli points out.

Another is pay transparency — making salaries public information. "A big thing that is emerging is comparable worth, since men and women are in different careers. If you take two workers with the same education performing jobs with the same skill, effort, and working under the same conditions, those same jobs need to pay the same," Milli says.

In the boardroom. We asked three real Don Drapers about how the show influenced their industry.

"Mad Men" — AMC's hit TV series set in the advertising world of mid-20th century New York — has had an enormous impact on pop culture. It's made the Tony Soprano-like character safe for network television. It has changed the way we watch and talk about television. It has even infiltrated our wardrobes — have you seen all the Megan Draper-worthy flares and jumpsuits on the runways this past season? But, what effect, if any, has it had on the advertising industry itself?

"I don't know if I should give 'Mad Men' sole credit for this, but one thing I've noticed is there seems to be a shift away from big egos of the Don Draper variety," says Ari Halper, executive creative director at Grey. "People are much more transparent and collaborative and humane toward their co-workers and their clients. Of course, that could have to do with Gen Xers and Millennials taking charge, but I do think Don was held up as a mirror to some people in advertising, and they thought, 'Oh, we do not want to be like that.'"

But it's clear that even if no one wants to be like Don Draper, they do want to give presentations like him. "When I first started watching 'Mad Men,' I thought, 'Wow, I've been to lots of business presentations, but I've never seen one like that,'" says Jeff Lang, a freelance creative director based in New York.

Matthew says ...

"One way that 'Mad Men' has changed the advertising business: I've heard that clients started demanding a presentation that had emotion and substance. They want to be sold. And that made me happy, because they're entitled to it. They don't want someone to throw open a binder with a bunch of numbers on it."

Life imitating art

A man inspired by Don Draper

"It's definitely inspired me in my work," says Halper. "There's that iconic scene where Don is giving this pitch for the Kodak carousel, and it's a really emotional and powerful moment. But it also demonstrated that the most powerful thing you can do is show the client a product like they've never seen it before. I was working on a Canon pitch at the time, and after seeing that I just went in and was like, 'No one cares about megapixels. They care about how they can capture photos that make them happy or create prints that make people go, "Wow,"' and that signaled a massive shift in their advertising."

'Are you a Don Draper?'

Curiosity as a legacy of 'Mad Men'

But the legacy of "Mad Men" will be the curiosity it inspired about the ad business, says Steve Landsberg, who worked at several of the big firms name-checked on the show before founding his own agency, Grok. "In the past few years, people are suddenly way more interested in what I do.

"When I meet someone at a party, and I say I work in advertising, the first thing they ask is, 'Are you a Don Draper? Is it just like "Mad Men"?'" he says. "It's become a reference point."

THE FUN STARTS HERE

What does the guy jumping in the credits of "Mad Men" really mean? We sit down with the series creator — and our guest editor — for these answers and more as his award-winning TV show draws to a close.

Matthew Weiner's exit interview

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Matthew Weiner understands the emphasis that's been placed on the final episodes of "Mad Men," but at the same time, he thinks scrutinizing them might detract from the experience. Or, to put it more bluntly: "There's too much weight put on the ending of a TV show. 'Dear America: Shut the f— up and watch,'" Weiner offers with a laugh. "That's my headline." Well, the series creator and executive producer is the boss — for today at least.

The Art of the Ending

When you set the finale date a few years back, did you know how it was going to end?
No. Well, I knew where I wanted it to go when I sold the show, believe it or not, but I didn't know how it would happen. And how it happens is everything on that show. The security of knowing that you have three more seasons to go without any more fear of cancelation is an incredibly gratifying vote of confidence, but we still treated every season like it was the last season. There was a finale concept, which I didn't share with the writers until probably the beginning of the last season. My wife knew about it, and Jon Hamm knew about it, but that was it.

I've been rewatching the show from the beginning in preparation for these final episodes.
That's great, but just know that we built the show one episode at a time and one season at a time. I'm not being facetious; the end of Season 5 was the only time that I knew I would need something for the next season. So when you have something like having Peggy go to a different agency, we already knew that the next year we were going to have them merge. That's something I wouldn't have done in the past just because I've been like, "Figure it out the next year." That's the advantage of having future real estate invested in.

What have you learned about crafting the end of a series?
Ending a TV show is not organic to the TV writing process. Your whole job is to propel people into the next week. So thinking about where you leave the characters, and how it would affect the people who had watched it from the beginning, is one thing. Then, you think that it will be out there, and people who have never seen the show will know it when they start — how does that taint it? And I do think about the audience. I do think about what are they going to feel like when it goes off the air.

The Jump

How much do you read of the pages and pages of the Internet devoted to discussing and deconstructing the show?
I go in and out. I am puzzled by if it's a flaw in the educational system in the United States, but the use of the words "symbol" and "symbolism" is puzzling to me. There is nothing symbolic in the show. A symbol is like when Peggy did her Popsicle pitch, and it looked like a medieval tableau of Jesus giving communion. That's symbolism. I don't operate in that world. I wish I did. Maybe this is where they get this idea of symbolism from, but that guy jumping out the window in the credits? That's happening in his mind. He's standing there, and then at the end he's sitting there. That's his imagination. It's not literally happening. Do people know that? It's fascinating to me, and people are entitled to take whatever they can. But what I do resent is the suggestion that in some way we are screwing with the audience.

And I'm saying this as someone who has lost his favorite show before. That's the other mistake you can make: Don't assume everybody watching your show, that it's their favorite show. But write to the people that you think it is.

Sombrero-gate

So, opening credits aside, what kind of false symbolism are we talking about?
I was laughing because I got all of these requests about a sombrero in Don's office in a recent episode — people asking, "What is it? What's the significance?" I couldn't remember, so I went and talked to the prop master and set decorator, and they were like, "You said you wanted something fun." I was like, "Oh, OK." So I'm talking to David Chase and I go, "This sombrero thing is out of control," and he goes, "I almost wrote you about that. I thought that was so great. I just saw it in Don's office, and it made me laugh." I was like, "Are you f—ing with me?"

Dress like Don, Peggy and Joan

Tips on how to channel the show's other star: its fashion

Sure, we obsessed over the storylines, but we were also seduced by the fashion of "Mad Men." Don's suave, sharp suits, Joan's curve-magnifying pencil skirts, Peggy's quirky two-piece sets — the employees of Sterling, Cooper & Partners didn't show up to work in everyday jeans and T-shirts. They dressed to rule Madison Avenue. Here are the fashion tips to take away from the show, according to creator Matthew Weiner. METRO

The whole thing about office culture is being prepared to make a change during the day to spruce up.

• Keep a tie in your desk. You can always put on a tie with the knot pulled down and look better than you look without a tie at all.

• Always have a dress from the dry cleaner in your office. Have a change of clothes in whatever minimal way you can make accessible during the day.

• Sunglasses! They're fun to buy, they're not that expensive, and they can instantly make you look like you have an outfit on. I don't know how I feel about the hat thing, but sunglasses are a great way to have an outfit. And your size in sunglasses never changes, so you can't get depressed when you go to the store.

• A watch is a great thing.

• I don't think men should be afraid of rings, either. Almost all of the characters except for Don wear rings — not just wedding rings.

• BONUS TIP: Take a nap (if you can without getting fired). I always let everybody take a nap. I always take a nap. Don Draper took a nap 15 minutes into the pilot.

I believe, like Superman's cape, that you should dress so that you feel better. I think Superman, when he's in his cape, feels more important. So in your mind, find a way to put on a cape.

Five movies to fix your 'Mad Men' hangover

"Mad Men" isn't just a show about the 1960s and early 1970s; it's deeply rooted in the era, quick to whip out a reference to historical events and even movies from the era. Now that its run is about to end, you may long for more of the same. Here are some movies, all streaming right now, that not only hail from the same period but show it in different lights.

MATT PRIGGE

Jack Lemmon falls for an elevator operator (Shirley MacLaine) sleeping with his boss (Fred MacMurray) in Billy Wilder's "The Apartment."

'The Apartment'

Netflix Instant

Creator/showrunner Matthew Weiner has cited Billy Wilder's Best Picture winner as one of "Mad Men"'s chief influences, and it's not hard to see why: It's an office dramedy set in the heart of New York in the same era. Its antagonist could be Don Draper deeper into middle age: a self-hating exec (Fred MacMurray) having an affair with a pretty elevator operator (Shirley MacLaine). She wrestles with staying with him or with Jack Lemmon's nice guy office drone — the type used to, in movies as in life, getting walked on by the bigwigs.

'Darling'

Hulu

The setting of John Schlesinger's angry but stylish drama is Swingin' London, but the world is almost the same: the fashion and advertising biz. Julie Christie, in her Oscar-winning turn, plays an aspiring model whose cutthroat rise to the top alienates her bookish boyfriend (Dirk Bogarde) but attracts the wandering eye of a Faustian ad monster (Laurence Harvey). It's filled with pretty women, handsome men, stunning duds and jet-setting locales — and like "Mad Men," its feel for this universe is very love-hate, though mostly hate.

"Mad Men" is into the '70s now, which means that uptown from their offices lurked the addicts seen in this gritty urban drama, one of them played by Al Pacino in his screen breakthrough. He plays Bobby, a small-time dealer who pollutes the world of a shy young woman (Kitty Winn) in a New York that will turn even more disheveled and dangerous throughout the decade.

"Mad Men" has regularly name-dropped the period's movies, none more eye-brow-raising than this Swedish import — one of the first movies to show sex outside the porno circuit. As such, it became one of 1969's top box office draws, though the sex and nudity played only a small part. The bulk is a playful blend of doc and fiction, exploring the youth culture in Stockholm. In fact, it's so ambitious it has a companion film, "I Am Curious (Blue)." (For another streaming great that once flickered in front of Don, seek out "Rosemary's Baby" on Netflix Instant.)

Don Draper was talented enough to worm his way from the middle of nowhere to flashy New York City. If he had been less talented or less handsome, he might have gotten stuck in the purgatory that plagues the subjects of David and Albert Maysles' legendary fly-on-the-wall documentary. Made before such Maysles biggies as "Gimme Shelter" and "Grey Gardens," it hangs with traveling Bible salesmen, most fascinating and heartbreaking among them poor Paul Brennan — an aging would-be huckster struggling to eke by while holding on to a career at which he's never been very good at all.

Five rules for aspiring TV writers

Fame doesn't come overnight.

MATTHEW WEINER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Young writers have often asked "Mad Men" creator Matthew Weiner for advice on how to make it in Hollywood. He sums up his tips as follows:

"Write for free, because no one's going to pay you to write," Weiner says. "You're the most expendable part of your ideas. You come in there with an idea that they don't know if you can execute, you are the first thing that's going to go."

Weiner was also one of the contributors to the new book "Getting There: A Book of Mentors," by Gillian Zoe Segal. In an essay geared toward aspiring television writers, he details his rules for success on the small screen. An excerpt from his piece follows.

1 When you have a meeting with somebody, look that person up and know everything you can about him or her. This seems basic, but it took me forever to get it.

2 Remember people's names and don't be insulted if they don't return the favor. If you know someone's name, you can own them. I read that Napoleon used this trick. He spent huge amounts of time committing his soldiers' names to memory

"Write for free, because no one's going to pay you to write. You're the most expendable part of your ideas."

Matthew Weiner

— and they would die for him.

3 You have to send your material cold to people who are in the business of looking at new ideas. You must also be in the industry's city to network and schmooze. You have to make connections to people.

4 When someone rejects your work, register that they don't like it but don't listen to the reason why. People feel that they have to say something, and they often give a capricious justification to keep from hurting your feelings. Someone might say, "I don't like your movie because it's in black-and-white." You think, "Damn it. If I had made it in color, I could've sold it." That's probably not true.

5 Execution is everything. It does not matter if you invented "Star Wars" before "Star Wars" existed. Actually write the script.

Five facts about Matthew Weiner

We hope you're just as excited as we are about 'Mad Men' creator Matthew Weiner guest editing Metro for our weekend edition. Here are five things you might not know about him.

1 He's a former "Jeopardy!" champion.

2 He has four sons (but none of them are named Don).

3 Eighty-five men tried out for the part of Don Draper, and Weiner had to fight for then-unknown Jon Hamm.

4 He's known for being militant about plot details being revealed in advance of episodes airing, even going so far as including a list of specific plot points he hopes reviewers won't discuss in their articles when screeners are sent out.

5 He's meticulous about every aspect of the show's production and occasionally includes costume notes in the scripts when he feels strongly about what someone should be wearing. METRO

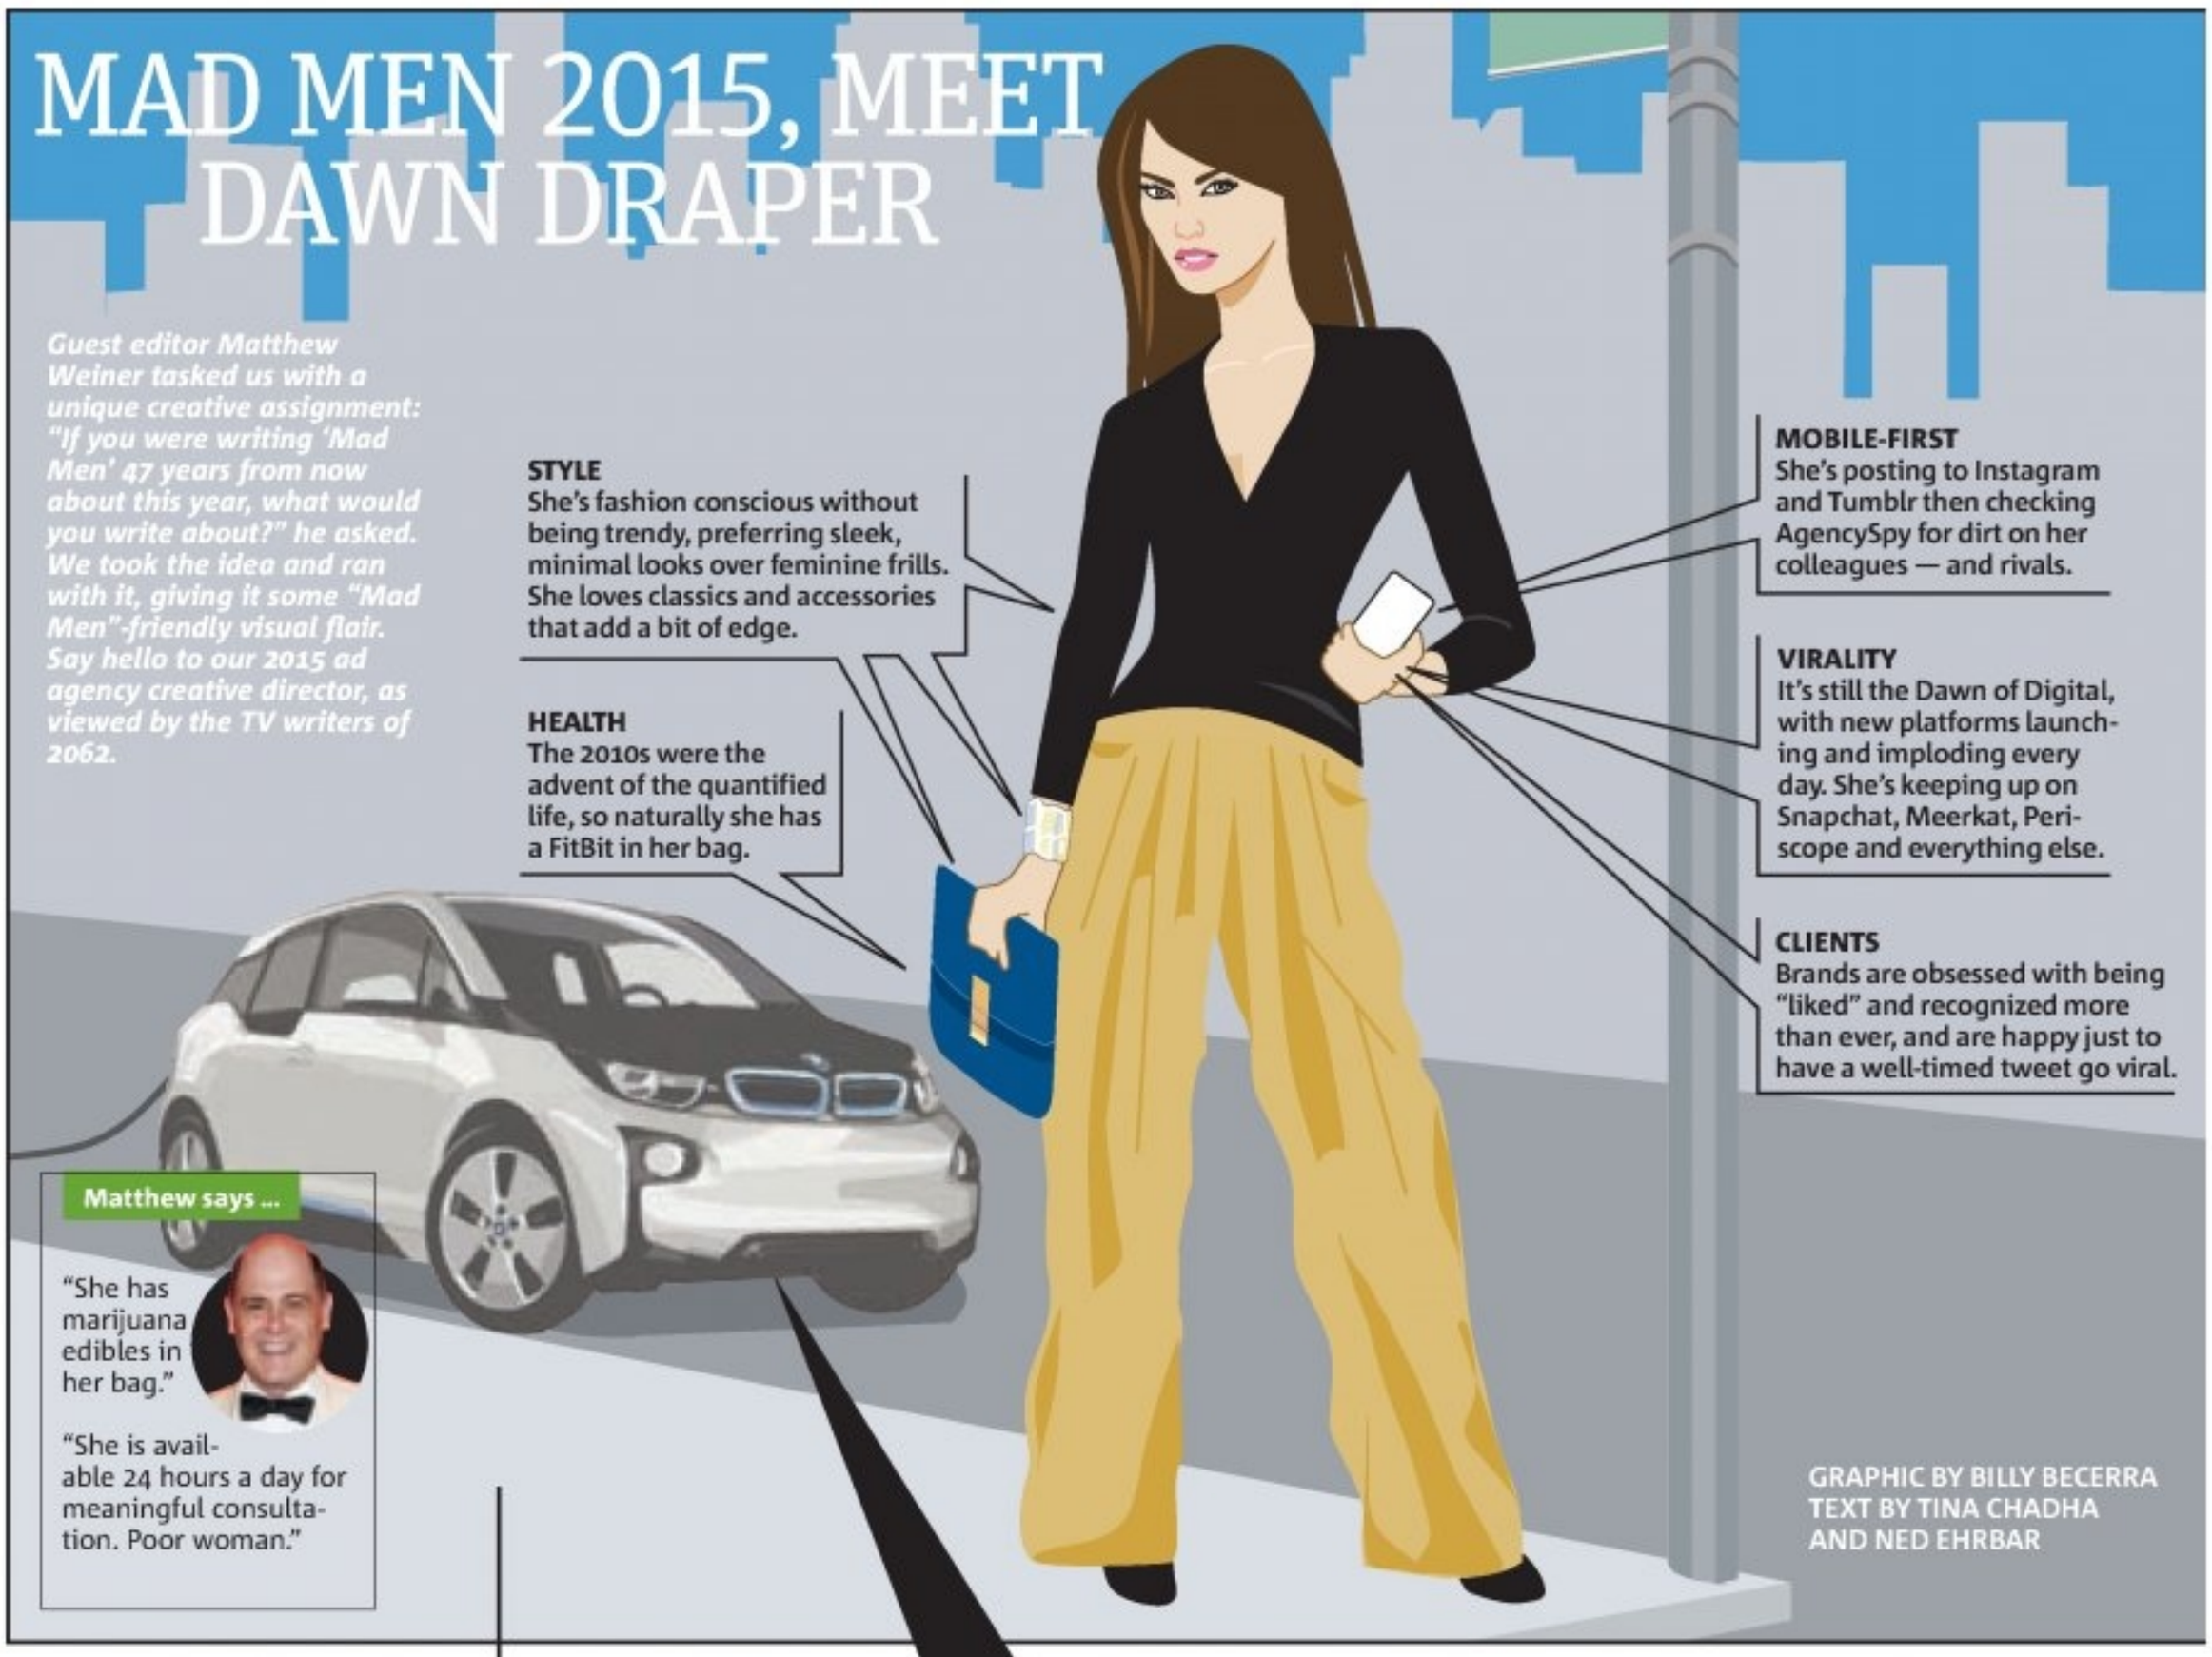
MAD MEN 2015, MEET DAWN DRAPER

Guest editor Matthew Weiner tasked us with a unique creative assignment: "If you were writing 'Mad Men' 47 years from now about this year, what would you write about?" he asked. We took the idea and ran with it, giving it some "Mad Men"-friendly visual flair. Say hello to our 2015 ad agency creative director, as viewed by the TV writers of 2062.



STYLE
She's fashion conscious without being trendy, preferring sleek, minimal looks over feminine frills. She loves classics and accessories that add a bit of edge.

HEALTH
The 2010s were the advent of the quantified life, so naturally she has a FitBit in her bag.

MOBILE-FIRST
She's posting to Instagram and Tumblr then checking AgencySpy for dirt on her colleagues — and rivals.

VIRALITY
It's still the Dawn of Digital, with new platforms launching and imploding every day. She's keeping up on Snapchat, Meerkat, Periscope and everything else.

CLIENTS
Brands are obsessed with being "liked" and recognized more than ever, and are happy just to have a well-timed tweet go viral.

Matthew says ...

"She has marijuana edibles in her bag."

"She is available 24 hours a day for meaningful consultation. Poor woman."

OFFICE CULTURE
Our creative director started her own firm right out of college, built it up and let someone bigger buy it.

OFFICE-STYLE LIQUOR CABINET/ MINIBAR:
The Mad Men (and Women) still let loose but not in the office anymore. But of course she has a bottle of bubbly in her desk drawer ready to go for special moments.

PERSONAL TRANSPORTATION
A BMWi3, because nothing says status and savvy like an environmentally friendly electric car.

Letters to the editor

Wages adhere to supply and demand

Most everyone would like to get paid more for any work they do. The thing is, our economic system is ruled for the most part by supply and demand.

I'm just taking a guess here, but I would bet the majority of the individuals who typically work in the fast food industry possess fewer marketable skills than, say, someone who has acquired a rarer skill that requires a lot of formal education or some kind of apprenticeship.

When you look at the pool of available workers who possess these limited skills, it is quite large; therefore, the supply outweighs the demand for these workers, hence they command a lower wage because there are numerous individuals of the same skill set that compete for the same limited low-skill jobs.

During the recent oil boom in North Dakota, due to the limited population and the influx of skilled oil workers, the pool of unskilled workers was so small that fast food chains had to offer $15 an hour to lure people to flip burgers. The supply was small and the demand was great; therefore, the unskilled in that geographic area commanded a larger wage. There is nothing personal about this — it is just Economics 101. Until the supply of unskilled workers drops below the demand for unskilled workers, the wages they can command will remain low.

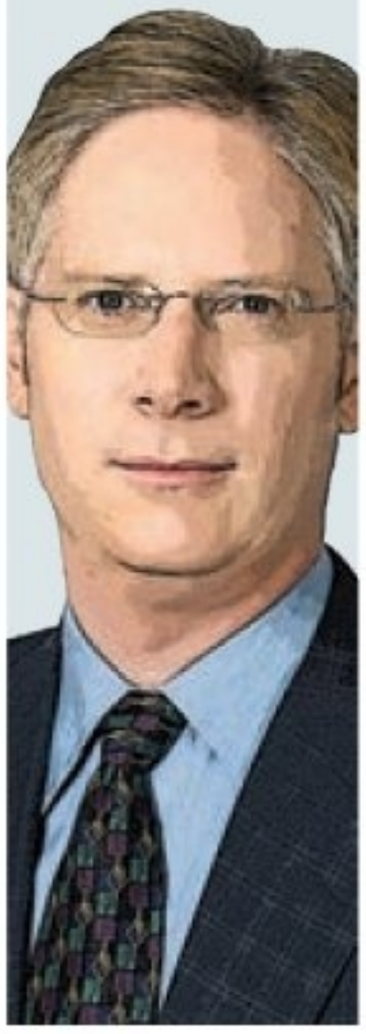
VACATION DAZE IN WASHINGTON

Opinion

TOM FOREMAN

CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY: A DAD, A DAUGHTER, AND A RIDICULOUS PLAN."



Here in D.C., the landscape is finally in bloom, lobbyists have thrown out the traditional first bribe of spring, and the gyrocopters are buzzing the Capitol. So once again, it is time for Americans far and wide to avoid taking their vacations.

You think I'm kidding, but in recent years that has been very much the case. As much as we say we like taking time off, you couldn't drag most of us off of the hamster wheel with hot tongs.

A survey last year (no doubt by overworked pollsters) found that most of us take only about half the time off we are owed.

Seems like, for all the talk of a recovered economy, people still fear losing hours, being passed over for promotions or being welcomed back with a sticky note — "Chuck, please stop by HR."

Heaven knows I'm doing my part. Already, I have not scheduled a trip to Hawaii, a getaway weekend to the Keys and a camping trip to the Smokies.

Not one of them is happening, and if I can get the right price on my flights, I might even not go to Paris!

Admittedly, vacations restore my vitality, spur my imagination and send me back to work with renewed vigor even if I do show up wearing a T-shirt that says "Wasting Away in Margaritaville." Almost certainly, the cost of people not taking time off is higher than the cost of letting folks cool out in their Chacos a bit.

I make this case every spring, but what do I know? The trend lines are running against me, so I'll knuckle down and keep unscheduling my vacation days just like everyone else. It's not always easy. The other night, my wife said, "If no one else is taking time off, it seems like that should make it easier for you to get away for a while."

"I can't deny your logic," I said.

"So why don't you take a break?"

"Ha! Good one!" I replied. Personally, I think one of us has been working too hard.

Phillies wrecked in finale

Dustin McGowan allowed four runs and didn't make it out of the fourth inning in his first career start with the Phillies Thursday, an embarrassing loss that saw eight hits but just one run. Adeiny Hechavarria and Martin Prado combined for seven RBIs in the Phils' setback.

'Mad Men' era formative

Sports. The world of sports has undergone a thorough transformation since the 1960s.

"Mad Men" sheds light on the palpable impact the 1960s (and early '70s) had as a formative time period for the culture we know today. And just as social norms, politics and the world of advertising experienced a critical period during the "Mad Men" era, so too did the world of sports.

From humble beginnings, the juggernauts and billion-dollar industries that are the NFL, NBA and NHL seem to have had their unofficial births while Don Draper was at the height of his success (and struggles). And Major League Baseball continued as America's pastime, with the upstart Mets and slugging Yankees battling for New York City supremacy.

Here's a look at how the sports world has changed in the last 45 years.

From humble beginnings, the NFL's cultural explosion netted the league $9.5 billion in revenue during 2013. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

The NFL

The Pete Rozelle era took the NFL from a fringe professional league (college football was previously king) to the giant of industry and culture it is today. In 1960, the NFL had just 10 teams and had its hands full competing for players and ratings against the AFL's 10 teams. But a merger in 1966 set the two leagues on a course to join together, and after the Packers beat the Chiefs in front of a half-empty stadium in Super Bowl I, the league picked up steam. Three million people went to pro football games in all of 1960; 114.4 million watched the Patriots beat the Seahawks in January in the most recent Super Bowl.

The NBA

The 1960s were dominated by one team: the Celtics. The Bill Russell-led squad won nine of the possible 10 championships in the decade. The early part of the '60s was Wilt Chamberlain's best time, as the 7-footer averaged 50.4 points and 25.7 rebounds in 1961-62. In March of 1962, he scored 100 points in one game. The league grew in popularity due in part to its stars but would hit a roadblock in the 1970s. Luckily for the league, Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird would come to the rescue in the 1980s.

for major sports leagues

Major League Baseball

Major League Baseball was in the midst of a spectacular decade, one that Draper himself could have enjoyed. The Yankees, led by Mickey Mantle, dominated the early part of the '60s while the "Miracle Mets" in 1969 won a championship after just seven years of existence. The years in the middle showcased some of the best pitching the game would ever see, with Sandy Koufax thrilling with his exceptional curveball and Bob Gibson posting an ERA of 1.12 in 1968.

Don Draper would no doubt have rooted for, and enjoyed, the 1969 Mets winning an improbable World Series title against the Orioles.

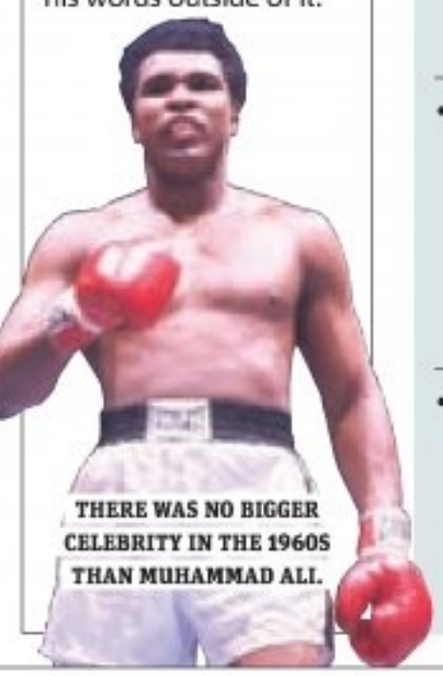
The NHL

When the decade began, the NHL was comprised only of the Original Six. Then in the mid 1960s, the league expanded to include six more teams (in part to squash competition from the Western Hockey League). The Red Wings' Gordie Howe and Blackhawks' Bobby Hull were the superstars of the era, but teams from Canada, the Canadiens and Maple Leafs, won eight of the decade's 10 titles. The game would grow in popularity in the '70s after expansion teams like the Flyers began to play competitively and even more in the '80s after the Miracle on Ice.

GORDIE HOWE

Boxing

Before it fell off the map as a major sport due in part to pay-per-view, there wasn't a more popular pastime in the '60s than boxing. And with race relations reaching a fevered pitch and the Vietnam War heating up, Muhammad Ali dazzled with his performance in the ring and his words outside of it.



THERE WAS NO BIGGER CELEBRITY IN THE 1960S THAN MUHAMMAD ALI.

Sports on the show

While "Mad Men" doesn't focus on the world of sports, there are plenty of references to it during the show's seven seasons:

- British immigrant Lane Pryce proudly hung a New York Mets pennant in his office. Don Draper would later do the same.
- Sterling Cooper, during the first three seasons, dealt with clients like jai alai (a failed venture seeking to eclipse baseball in popularity) and a new Madison Square Garden.
- Don gives his two cents on the famed Ali vs. Liston fight in 1965, predicting that Liston will go about his business while Ali will "dance and talk and throw a few before he's wiped out."
- When Peggy Olson goes to work at Cutler, Gleason, and Chaough, she helps them create a Super Bowl ad for headphone company Koss: "Lend me your ears".

- Addison Russell, 2B, Cubs — The No. 11 overall pick in 2011 has the power/speed combo and fills the middle infield positions.

NFL news

How will Tim Tebow's landing in Philadelphia affect your fantasy draft?

- Chip Kelly has cut DeSean Jackson, extended Riley Cooper, overdrafted Marcus Smith, dumped a pile of money on running backs and refused to try Brandon Boykin outside. Adding Tim Tebow to the offseason roster isn't anywhere near his most questionable move. That said, people downgrading DeMarco Murray's projection because they think Tebow will steal goal line carries are silly. If Tebow even makes the team, he's not stealing anything from an elite short-yardage runner Chip has identified as an ideal fit for his rushing scheme.

FANTASY BASEBALL: STAY WITH HOT HAND

DeSclafani's pitching has been stellar so far, but will it continue? / GETTY IMAGES

It's good to be a cynic in fantasy sports. Many times, recency bias is our worst enemy because it results in short-term overreactions.

However, disregarding hot stretches early in the baseball season can be catastrophic. If you've struck gold with these guys, don't sell high. They're the real deal.

We also knew he'd have an All-Star kind of upside if he took a leap forward. So far Archer has done just that, striking out 30 batters in his first 25 1/3 innings while sporting a 1.07 ERA. It's in line with what we saw at the very end of last year and what he's capable of, given his fastball/slider combination.

Suit up Souza

Steven Souza Jr. did not come out of nowhere. He hit .350 with 18 homers and 26 steals in Triple-A last year, was a third-round pick in 2007 and was a key piece of the Wil Myers trade. We don't think of 26-year-old prospects as exciting in the era of Mike Trout and Bryce Harper, but this is a prime age for most mortal players. Souza, batting second in the Rays' lineup nightly, is here to stay.

Arches in the park

We knew Chris Archer would be a viable mixed-league asset based on the two solid MLB seasons already under his belt.

Fat Tony from Jersey

Anthony DeSclafani, from New Jersey, is not a character in an upcoming Martin Scorsese film. He also won't overwhelm you with eye-opening stuff. But DeSclafani knows how to pitch, highlighted by an excellent walk rate, a hard-breaking slider for a strikeout pitch and a reasonable 3.23 ERA in the minors. At just 25 years old, DeSclafani has a good chance to keep getting better while already in the Reds' big-league rotation.

Late-round sleepers are key for Eagles draft haul

Sure, the first few rounds get all the glory, but it's the late-round picks that can make or break a draft class. Here are some late-round steals the Eagles would be wise to jump on, if they can, in next week's NFL Draft. LUKE MILLER

The Eagles have a clear need at safety, and if they don't address it in the early rounds, former Nittany Lion Amos would be a good fit for the Birds. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Adrian Amos, S, Penn State

Amos (6-foot, 218 pounds) improved greatly on his combine numbers (turning a 4.52 40-yard dash into a 4.37) at Penn State's pro day, and the Eagles were there to take notice. He has since worked out privately for the team.

Amos, who also played cornerback in college, has the cover skills the Eagles are looking for at safety. He had three interceptions in 2014. Penn State's defense allowed the second fewest total yards and seventh fewest points per game in the country in 2014. Amos played in 49 games and started the final 37 of his career.

Tyler Lockett, WR, Kansas State

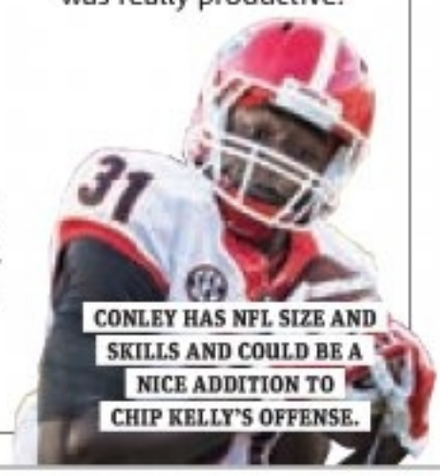
Lockett (5-foot-10, 182 pounds) had great production throughout college that culminated in a 106-reception, 1515-yard, 11-touchdown senior season in 2014. Lockett is similar to Josh Huff in his ability to gain yards after the catch. He scored six return touchdowns.

His father Kevin (whose records Tyler broke at Kansas State) played in the NFL. Lockett has a reputation as a willing blocker and comes without character concerns. His size may limit him to slot duty.

Chris Conley, WR, Georgia

Conley (6-foot-2, 212 pounds) took the combine by storm with a 4.35 40-yard dash and 45-inch vertical jump. Playing in Georgia's run-oriented offense limited his opportunities, but when he did get the ball he produced: eight touchdowns from 36 catches in 2014. He led the Bulldogs in receiving yards the last two seasons.

Conley played one season with Brandon Boykin at Georgia. Conley is keeping a draft diary for Georgia website Dawgs247 and said of his visit to Philadelphia: "That went well. It was fun, the furthest north I have ever been, and it was really productive."



CONLEY HAS NFL SIZE AND SKILLS AND COULD BE A NICE ADDITION TO CHIP KELLY'S OFFENSE.

Darryl Roberts, CB, Marshall

The Eagles hosted a visit from Roberts (6-foot, 182 pounds), who did not attend the combine but turned heads with his pro day. There, he recorded a 4.36 40-yard dash and 39-inch vertical leap. Roberts is a physical corner who goes up and competes to deflect throws and shows a willingness to tackle.

Obum Gwacham, DE, Oregon State

Gwacham (6-foot-5, 246 pounds) got off to a fast start with four sacks in his first four games in 2014. Gwacham is still learning the position but has undeniable athleticism. He performed in the high jump and triple jump for Oregon State's track team.

Asche leads the Phillies' offense in average, hits, slugging percentage, on base percentage and a bevy of other stats. / GETTY IMAGES

Asche a rare bright spot for lowly Phils

MLB. As Phillies veterans struggle, Cody Asche has picked up the slack on offense.

Excellent form has been lacking for the Phillies during the first 16 games of the season. Chase Utley, who received a much needed day off this afternoon, doesn't look right as he has had considerable trouble with outside pitches. Ryan Howard, who was also not in the lineup, has struggled mightily. The list goes on and on.

And then there is Cody Asche, who has been the best-looking hitter in the Phillies lineup very early in the season. Asche, who was bumped up to the three-hole for the Phillies finale against the Marlins, is off to a torrid start.

Asche, who is hitting .340, has been making much more solid contact than he did last season.

"I may have to retract what I said during the spring," a NL scout said. "I said that Asche wasn't going to do anything for the Phillies but he looks very strong at the plate. It's early, but he looks good."

Asche's form has been very good. When he drilled his second home run of the season during the Phillies Wednesday night loss to the Marlins, Asche's balance was perfect. He loaded up and extended his front leg as his right foot landed softly.

"I'm feeling good," Asche said. "I'm not putting any pressure on myself. I'm just trying to hit the ball solid."

By the numbers

Cody Asche's batting average, .333, is tied for the 14th best mark in the National League, though his 15 strikeouts put him near the top in that category too.

The Phillies can use some offensive production, particularly at home. The Phillies home batting average is an anemic . 211. Ryne Sandberg's club is averaging only three runs a game and have hit a paltry five home runs in eight games. With burners Ben Revere and Odubel Herrera at the top of the order and the fleet Freddy Galvis in the lineup, it's surprising that the Phillies have only four steals in eight home games.

"It's early," Revere said. "But expect us to get on track."

Not much has gone as expected so far for the Phillies. The team expected Domonic Brown, who is rehabbing with Triple-A Lehigh Valley to be in the lineup and not to have a new hitter in the cleanup spot every game. Who last month would have guessed that Jeff Francoeur would be batting fourth in Game 16 for the Phillies?

"It's going to be interesting to see how things evolve for the Phillies as this season continues," the scout said. "Who knows what will happen next?"

LEGAL NOTICES

Pursuant to the Land Recycling and Environmental Remediation Standards Act, the Act of May 19, 1995, P.L. #4, No. 2 (Act 2), notice is hereby given that 27th and Girard, LLP (Remediator) is submitting a Notice of Intent to Remediate and a Remedial Investigation Report/Cleanup Plan to the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection, Southeastern Regional Office, for the property known as 2620 Girard Avenue, in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (Site), for a historic release associated with chlorinated compounds. Some metals were detected in soil, and some chlorinated volatile organic compounds were detected in groundwater at the site. Remediation will include pathway elimination for impacted soil using Site Specific Standards, and demonstration of attainment of Residential Used Aquifer Statewide Health Standards or Site Specific Standards for groundwater. Act 2 also provides that when a site is being remediated to a Site-Specific Standard, the municipality is afforded a 30-day comment period.

Publication of this notice in a local newspaper initiates the 30-day public and municipal comment period. Until June 1, 2014, the City of Philadelphia may request to be involved in the development of the remediation and reuse plans for the site, and to develop and implement a public involvement plan. Questions and comments should be submitted to the Department of Environmental Protection, Southeast Regional Office, Land Recycling/Cleanup Division, 2 East Main Street, Norristown, Pennsylvania 19401
